Profile of a Pinkerton School Nurse

A Pinkerton school nurse's most important role is both in the health office and the school community. They strive to provide comprehensive school-based health services through evidence based practices to students. Our school nurses are able to identify and respond to concerns regarding students' physical, mental, and psychosocial health status, among a wide range of student needs, from basic health needs or attention to working with the medically fragile. The school nurse provides care and supportive health teaching to students through assessment and evaluation. The school nurse will also offer supportive measures to help maintain chronic conditions and prevention of further illness and injury.

By providing these health services, the school nurse coaches students to understand their health and well-being, as well as become independent and critical thinkers. School nurses are supported in their professional learning towards growth in all areas and are encouraged to use a variety of techniques in their clinical care, assessments, and instruction. Fostering a positive and supportive environment is essential to the academic and social-emotional development of our students. Pinkerton's Mission and Vision is utilized to guide a school nurses' practice.

As a member of a department and the school community, it is essential that a Pinkerton school nurse displays a collaborative attitude. The growth and progress of a department and the Pinkerton community depends on the involvement and engagement of the faculty members in supporting the department and school goals. School nurses' creation of a positive atmosphere in the school community reinforces health as a lifelong activity. The modeling of Pinkerton's goals of courtesy, respect, and responsibility can be demonstrated through a school nurses' relationships with students, staff, and parents.

Pinkerton Academy asks all faculty members to exhibit the highest degree of professionalism in all situations, whether they are actively instructing, performing professional duties, or representing the Academy in another capacity. It is imperative that a school nurse maintain their certification, meet their commitments as outlined by the Employee Handbook and individual contracts, and uphold all school policies. If a school nurse finds themselves in disagreement with any school policy, they can voice that disagreement within the processes outlined in the Employee Handbook. Pinkerton Academy faculty are dedicated to showing respect for others, their opinions, and their assignments. All faculty need to demonstrate integrity, sound judgment, and an ongoing commitment to their professional duties and growth, their students, and the Pinkerton community.
